The crack you hear occasionally is probably one of those new year resolutions going to smash.

"Russian squadron sinks forty Turkish sailing vessels which were carrying food to Constantinople."

Now, if the German fleet hadn't been bottled up at Kiel, it might have been some help to her ally—and kept her company down to Davy Jones' locker.

Fracious Billy suggests that if shoes continue to go up, they will soon be used for caps.

Another U.S. boat—the cruiser Milwaukee—has gone ashore near Eureka, Cal.

Uncle Sam is determined to get into the game—of losing ships.

Perhaps by this time, some of the deported Belgians are reading Mr. Wilson's touching thoughts about Germany being in this war to protect helpless neutrals.

Sure, she knew she would have to alter them very considerably—or to be altered by the Allies.

As we understand the farm loan proposition, if a farmer has money he will find it easy to negotiate a loan.

Last week when the British war loan subscription was put on the market at London, half a billion dollars was subscribed for in four hours.

Wonder how much we would get in if we open our subscription book and ask some of our subscribers, who are in arrears to drop in and see us. We'll try it, anyway. Please don't come in too fast.

President Wilson may or may not be able to settle the trouble in Europe, but will Europe have to be called in to settle his difficulties with Carranza.

Balaam's ass lived too soon. In this era he could have been closely related to his nibs the kaiser.

The Forty Years War!

THE news from the Somme as it comes in is more encouraging than that of the preceding day. In spite of the immense difficulties that are put in our path by a winter's campaign, we advance still further across an "impregnably" fortified acreage of superficial and subterranean obstacles—proving to a public perhaps too sceptical, that German positions are only impregnable until taken by us, and also that our offensive is not over, and that we can wait, recuperate and finally win through.

Many people, measuring our ground by the sorrowful and bloodstained inch, cannot refrain from a comparison of time and distance here utterly out of true reckoning.

They say: "See how little a time it took them to overrun France. See how long it takes us to dislodge them from their gains." And they bewail that unreadiness of the first months.

Well, it is wise to reflect that what they gained then they gained not in a few months so much as in forty years.

Forty years' continuous preparation; forty years of weighing chances and of keeping Europe breathless with doubt or expectation; forty years of undermining, of threatening, of spying, cajoling. It would indeed have been marvellous had their readiness not given them a chance of planting fangs and feet very deeply in that wounded soil of France and Belgium. We may bewail our confidence in Progress, in peaceful ideas, in the good Europeanism of Europe. But while we do that, we can get some consolation from the thought that our few months of a new offensive—six months of it—are a reply, a counter stroke against forty years, not against months merely. Each stroke on the Somme undoes years of their labour. Each stroke answers an effort of years.

Bearing this in mind, we shall not under-estimate the value of each yard gained. But if we need another standard, another reflection still, we shall find it in this conviction that NO German position can be taken. No plan they formed by their forty years but can be countered, if we have faith and perseverance, by our months. Our months meet their years and out weigh them

On account of the blizzard and bad condition of the roads, the mail going south on Friday did not leave till Monday morning. Mr. and Mrs. Dell returned home from their trip to Sask. last Saturday. They were accompanied by Mr. Dell's sister from Raymore, Sask.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Corcoran left on Tuesday for Calgary. We regret to learn that Mrs. Corcoran is very low with heart trouble, and that we can wait, recuperate and finally win through.

HOW THE DAUGHTERS OF BRITAIN ARE HELPING TO WIN THE WAR

THOUSANDS ARE ENGAGED IN MUNITION WORKS

Hall Caine, the Well Known British Author, Paints a Vivid Picture
Of the Awesome Sights in Woolwich, where Women Perform
Much of the Work of Shell Making

We have always been proudly conscious of what the sons of Britain have been doing at the front. Is it not true that the daughters of Britain are doing almost as much?

The women of the Army of Woolwich is at our own doors, few of us who sleep in London have any real sense of its colossal presence, its sense of infinite power, its sense of awe.

There are thousands of women of Woolwich who sleep in London, few of us who sleep in London have any real sense of its colossal presence, its sense of infinite power, its sense of awe.

That is not all. Notwithstanding its fierce reality Woolwich is a symbol rather than a geographical expression. To that extent it is the symbol of a nation, a half mile by two and a half, with its unnumbered workshops, its endless avenues and its hundred and twenty miles of internal railway, there radiate the network of the British Empire. Its round road about, so that 30,000 workers more, chiefly women (70,000 in all), are feeling this almost fathomless responsibility. It is a great industrial stupor with an army that reaches over, across and around London and the country about it.

Before going into the women's workshops you are taken to the front line of the British Empire, impossible to count to Woolwich without seeing the awful basileas of bridled force in which the mammoth guns are created. Here is one of them, vast as a house, the barrel of a colorless Nasmyth hammer, with a blow of 40 tons, is pounding on a thick block of white-hot steel. First a gentle tap to make sure of position and then a thunderous thud that makes the earth quake beneath your feet.

A few moments later you are in another vast forge, where there is nearly as much noise and handiwork as at Vicksburg and not unlike in form, although stark and black. Under its open arch, without a sound or the appearance of a hand to guide them, a thousand hammers, each the size of a ghatlike, the great anvils with their ringing freight glide into position.

A score of stalwart men, stripped to the waist, stand round with long hammers and pick axes, and pound thick blocks of glowing, apparently cold metal on the top of the white-hot block. One man stands under a huge clock with his hands on a lever. No one speaks. There is a dead, sombre sound. Presently there comes slowly down, as from the keystone of the monster machine, a shining column of steel. It reaches the black ring, goes down, down, down, and then a pause to the white-hot block, rests on top of it for a moment, here is a thud as of something falling into a pit again, and then a roar of voices, the ring is sprung, and the ring has disappeared, having passed through the metal and dropped to the ground below. The sense of silent, irresistible, oceanic, almost motionless power is overwhelming.

But perhaps the most awesome of all sights in Woolwich is that of the big furnace house for manufacturing the steel. I think I have witnessed in various parts of the world some scenes of Nature in her wrath, scenes of earthquake, eruption, tidal wave, geyser and boiling river, but I doubt if I have ever been more awed.

Woolwich has a world of operations that are entirely suitable to women, and in a few minutes more we are in the midst of them. There is a new shop worked entirely by women, and it has been there since the beginning of the war.

The vast place covers an area which is apparently as great as that of Trafalgar Square. Two thousand women are here, and there is not a soul thousand in all. Immense, lathes, generally of small size, cover the cemented floor, with pulleys and wheels spinning in the air above them. It is a scene of forced, ceaseless, whirling and thudding and whining, tossing as from some unseen storm.

There is at first something so incongruous, in the spectacle of women working scenes of mortal massacre, (the index of the machine) that for a moment, as you stand at the entrance, the sight is scarcely believable, until you go in and look round, and then the astonishing fact seems perfectly natural. Although most of the machines in this shop are small, some are large, and very alarming. Here is a sort of a girl worker, one of the latter kind, a huge thing that has two large wheels like mill-wheels revolving at either side of her, and though she is forced to stand on the jaws of some great black monster, she does not seem to be the least afraid. Here is another young girl who is feeding a round disc with bits of metal that look like distant earthings, and as she goes particular care is taken to turn it up from its interior a coarse grout that hits you like a blow on the brain, yet she does not seem to be afraid.

But most of the work done by the women looks simple enough, and seems perfectly natural to their sex, although it has always hitherto been done by men. One woman is turning the plates for a gun on a turret lathe, another is cutting the copper bands for shells from tubes. Another is pressing the copper bands into their places. Yet another is riveting brass plates on to high explosive shell bodies. Some are drilling the holes through which six-inch shells are caught, others are fitting the shell surfaces, and yet others are gauging and parting off the bodies of the huge eight-inch high explosives. Many are making fuses, and many more are at work at the inspection board, where, being trained to the use of one gauge only, they have developed an efficiency to which we are not accustomed.

All the women wear the same uniform, a khaki-colored overall, girded at the waist, and a cap of the shape of a helmet-cup. This is in the interests of safety, so that the hair of the operator should be caught in the pulleys and belts of the machinery; but it has the further and not altogether negligible advantage of making the women look like infernal beings, especially when they are indomitable.

The place where they work is hot, and yet they are gauging and parting off the bodies of the huge eight-inch high explosives. Many are making fuses, and many more are at work at the inspection board, where, being trained to the use of one gauge only, they have developed an efficiency to which we are not accustomed.

There is no disloyalty in facing the facts, and it is not true that in most cases the women are not fully informed of the facts, without preparation for the worst, victory is impossible.

King George himself told us that last year, when he was in Germany, that if we did not put forth every effort we could not win.

We are not putting forth every effort, and we are not sure that we are losing. Hundreds, if not thousands, of our men could come a day of reckoning in Germany, the world would very quickly end the fighting.

DECLINING NOMINATION

Oyen, Alberta,

Jan. 15th, 1917

J. W. Bredin, Esq.

Sec. of Acadia Liberal Conservative Organization,

Cereal, Alberta.

Mr. Dear Mr. Bredin,

For reasons which I will later explain I have delayed writing you regarding the acceptance of the nomination given me by the Party, your organization represents, to contest in their interest the Electoral District of Acadia.

I am desirous first to express my deep sense of appreciation and gratitude for the honor conferred upon me in making me their choice, and I wish through you to convey my thanks and my acknowledgement of the obligation I owe to my supporters at the convention and to each of my well-wishers through out the Acadia district. It will ever be my desire to merit a continuance of their confidence through my interest and efforts for the public good.

However desirous I may be of accepting the honorable position of Candidate in the interest of the principles your Party represents in this Province I am forced to admit my inability to give sufficient time to the duties the position demands owing to the responsibilities of my farming interests, increased through the present difficulties of the labor situation. Therefore of necessity decline with regret the nomination.

Owing to a prospect of negotiations, which were under way, relieving me of a large part of present duties I have delayed making my decision. This prospect has not materialized and the probabilities do not justify further delay.

I assure you of my interest in your efforts and will be glad of an opportunity to work with you in bringing them to a successful issue.

Most sincerely yours,
W. D. BENTLEY

Minister Need Not Sign Oyen Bonds

AN IMPORTANT DECISION

An action of considerable interest for trustees in school districts in Alberta has just been handed down by Mr. Justice Simmons, in re the Board of Trustees of the Oyen school district and the Hoin. John R. Boyle, minister of education for the province of Alberta.

The Board of trustees made application for a mandamus to compel the minister of education to countersign an issue of debentures of the school district.

The minister of education based his refusal to sign the debentures upon these grounds:

That the selection of the school house had not been approved by the minister.

That the sale of the debentures by the school district to the contractor would enable the school district to evade compliance with the statute in regard to having the same approved by the minister.

Mr. Justice Simmons held that while prior to the act creating the board of utility commissioners a distinct and clearly outlined supervision of the regularity of the acts of the school board in issuing debentures was vested in the minister of education, that this supervision is now vested in the board of utility commissioners.

The public utilities board gave their approval by an order dated July 29th, 1916.

The contract made by the school board with the contractor did not, in the opinion of the judge, comply with the law as laid down in section 95, sub sec 8 of the school ordinance as amended in 1916.

If the debentures were counter signed and delivered to the local school board the latter in connivance with the contracting company would be enabled to hand the debentures to the contracting company in payment of their building contract and defeat the intention and purpose of said sub-section 8.

The application was therefore dismissed on the second ground.

The case is likely to be appealed.
